The mytharc in short

To oversimplify, things go like this:

The alien life form Purity (or Black Oil, or Black Cancer, or Grey aliens, or the Colonists) created life on Earth and the human race. Its main force left, but it will return to colonize the Earth through a mass viral pandemic, exterminating mankind in the process. The date for the colonization is December 22, 2012. In 1973, a group of people contacted the Colonists and made a deal. In exchange of the survival of this group and their families when the colonization happens, this group would have to prepare the way for this day. This group, which became a global conspiracy, the Syndicate, would have to be turned into alien/human hybrids in order to survive. The Syndicate's task became to create an alien/human hybrid through gene therapy, and to find an effective way to spread the Black Oil virus the day of the colonization. For the hybridization project, civilians were abducted and experimented on in concordance with the aliens. For the spreading, it was decided that it would be done using bees carrying the alien virus, given to them by genetically modified corn. The Syndicate used the military and any other governmental agency, doctors, ex-Axis powers experts, train boxcars, governmental or private buildings and created a clones and hybrids work force, and cataloguing and surveillance systems and facilities.

But like the aliens hid the fact that the human race would be nearly exterminated in the colonization, the Syndicate secretly conducted research for a vaccine that would render one immune to the Black Oil, saving every human being on the planet. There is also a second alien race, the Shapeshifters, who fight against Purity's supremacy. When the search for a vaccine began to give back results, the first successful alien/human hybrid was also created, meaning that the colonization was to begin. But the Syndicate fell victim to the shapeshifting Rebels. After the end of the Syndicate, the infrastructure for the colonization fell to the hands of the colonists. The alien Rebels and the remaining human resistance don't seem enough to prevent the inevitable impending colonization.

The Syndicate's role was filled in by the Supersoldiers, alien facsimiles with human appearance. FBI agents' Mulder and Scully's union resulted in a son, William, who proved to be the subject of a prophecy: to become the leader of the colonization (for this, Mulder must die), or to become the leader of the resistance that will bring colonization down. Scully gave up William for adoption to hide him and Mulder and Scully became fugitives to escape the all-encompassing Supersoldier conspiracy.

Combine that compelling however un-believable storyline with mysterious scripts, atmospheric cinematography and a moody soundscape, and you begin to understand the quality of the X-Files series.

Section 1 : Biogenesis

From the Big Bang to the 20th Century

Purity [Black Oil, Black Cancer]

At the beginning was Purity. It can be encountered in many forms.

1) Its life force is the Black Oil, a sentient liquid that can use a being as a host and take control of it. It can generate flashes of radioactivity and survive it; it is very hard to exterminate it. The hosting organism taken over by the Black Oil does not remain conscious, it is dominated by the Black Oil and is part of Purity. The Black Oil isn't a simple fluid waiting for a host or to become a grey. The Black Oil is the alien, it can think and is responsible for nearly all the alien activity we have seen. It can be brought down to a single strain of DNA, in which case it's called a virus; its appearance of black fluid can be attributed to the virus bathing inside hydrocarbons, and it can use similar fluids like battery oil as a means to spread and move. Bringing the virus analogy further, a being that is a host is infected by the Black Oil and another being that cannot be used as a host is immune to the Black Oil.

2) The Black Oil can also trigger the development of an alien entity inside the body of the host. This entity gestates and hatches killing its host. It is a tall, monstrous creature with Black Oil running in its veins.

3) Once this 'creature alien' grows and feeds, it sheds its skin to become a small grey humanoid alien. The Black Oil still remains the thinking center, and it gathers in the head of the grey. In the rest of the grey's body flows a green fluid toxic to humans that holds the Black Oil virus inside it; this fluid is not sentient and is akin to human blood. The greys are the social form of the Black Oil, the form in which this sentient being can build a civilization. The greys do not know diseases and communicate with each other through telepathy.

4) At this stage, the greys can reproduce sexually, which implicates pregnancy and embryonic development.

Purity developed a great technology and with space travel became a considerable force in the Galaxy. Purity developed highly automated ships that can rebuild themselves when they are damaged; intelligent force fields and invisibility fields; nanotechnology tracking devices; healing fields; and many other technologies that would only appear as magic to a human eye.

Purity is very old, even older than terrestrial life itself. It has been theorized that natural evolution of Purity was progressively bringing it closer to extinction. Then, Purity made up a plan majestic in size and time span. Throughout the Galaxy, it would create life or help its development on different planets and guide the evolution of life through billions of years until a being suitable for gestation would appear. Until then, Purity would be in stasis, waiting. Purity would then take over this being, gestate and effectively create an entirely new population of greys: a colonization, or a blossoming renaissance. On Earth, this host being would be the human race. After billions of years of evolution and space-faring, Purity's force was dried down; by having a planet in which Purity could gather strength again and be reinvigorated would be a safe bet for prolonged survival of the race.

Shapeshifters and Faceless Rebels

Purity created the race of the Shapeshifters, using its own genome as a blueprint. The Shapeshifters physically resemble humans, they can be infected by Purity, but they can change the shape of their bodies to some degree and heal themselves and others (using the palm of their hands). A green substance flows in their veins, extremely similar to the greys' only that it doesn't carry the Black Oil virus in it, which means the Shapeshifters are not immune to the Black Oil. The race of the Shapeshifters was developed and developed itself on a planet that belongs to the constellation of Cassiopeia. When the time was ripe, Purity colonized the planet of the Shapeshifters, exterminating most of them. Those who survived created a resistance movement, leading a guerilla war against Purity. They mutilated themselves so as not to be infected by Purity, and were called the Faceless Rebels.

A Shapeshifter is a host more resistant than a human. To infiltrate Earth, Purity used Shapeshifter hosts. Purity performed genetic tests on the Shapeshifters; one of these was cloned and his clones were infected by Purity: these Purity-controlled Shapeshifters are the Alien Bounty Hunters. The original non-infected Shapeshifter that was cloned escaped, freeing some of his non-infected clones with him. They joined the Rebels, with the original one as their leader.

Terrestrial Biogenesis and the Colonization project

Some 3.7 billion years ago, Purity arrived on a still barren Earth and created life using much of the primordial soup material already present, but also genetic material of the Black Oil itself. Purity left, though some of it lay dormant underground, in oil deposits or underground caves or outpost ships. For billions of years, the technology Purity left behind orchestrated terrestrial evolution, influencing natural evolution and triggering massive extinctions that made way to new species.

All this led to the premeditated creation of mankind, further using genetic material of Purity and that of terrestrial organisms. Large parts of the alien DNA were embedded in the human DNA and were turned off; these would serve as guidelines for the creation of a full alien organism when the Black Oil virus would infect the host. Humanity's cultural evolution was encouraged by Purity's technology, to which mankind owes the sacred texts of great religions (Judaism, Christianity, Islam); 'miracles' were performed to support these religions, like Moses' plagues, or healings and resurrections.

Humans thrived and filled the Earth, according to Purity's plan. Any humans that became infected by the Black Oil when they would discover an underground deposit were taken to a large craft, buried under the Antarctic ice, that would later be known as Base 1. There, they were put in stasis, slowing down the gestation process of the grey alien until a reawakening when the colonization would come. The date for colonization was set to December 22, 2012 AD.

The Anasazi American Indians adopted Purity's writing and language. Because of the great knowledge the Anasazi attained of Purity, they were abducted and hunted down to be exterminated. Knowledge of Purity's writing still survives today among the Navajo Indians.

Tunguska and Black Cancer

The same biogenesis effort had been attempted on Mars: Purity had brought life to a planet that at the time seemed promising. But life there did not thrive and Mars eventually became a desert planet; the only living thing that survived there was Black Oil, hidden underground like on Earth.

In 1908, in Siberia, a meteorite fell and devastated the landscape. The meteorite was in fact Martian rock, expelled in space by some random cosmic event. Inside the rock was Black Oil; it was very weakened by the shock of crashing on Earth -- so much so that when it entered a human host, it did not actively take control of it but barely put the host into a coma. This Black Oil was unable to move the body of the host or to trigger a gestation; for this reason, the Russians who found it called Purity "Black Cancer".

The Russians saw the military potential of a virus-like organism that induced coma: it could be used as a very effective biological weapon. Eventually, it came to the hands of Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein, who used it against US troops in the Gulf War (1989-1991). In this way, samples of the Black Cancer came to the hands of the American government.

Section 2 : New World Order World War II to 1973

The Cold War and Project Paper Clip

At the end of the Second World War in 1945, two countries emerged as super-powers in a ravaged world: the United States and the Soviet Union. The two enemies raced to recruit allies while Europe was weakened and the United Nations Organization was given birth; they offered economic help through the Marshall Plan and the COMECON; they offered political and military support through new alliances and lobbies. Aiming at technological superiority, the USA and the USSR fought over who would take the most scientists from the defeated Axis countries on their side. Many important figures escaped the Nuremberg and Tokyo trials by fleeing to the USA, where they were given political immunity in exchange of their services to their country of adoption. This was Project Paper Clip, conducted by the State Department from 1946 to 1957. The USA succeeded in recruiting rocket scientists like Wernher Von Braun, German doctors like Victor Klemper and Alvin Kurtzweil, Japanese doctors like Takeo Ishimaru, and rich German industrialists like Conrad Strughold.

The Zeus Faber Incident

The military really became aware of the existence of aliens during WWII. There were many UFO sightings by Air Force pilots; UFOs came to be known as 'Foo Fighters'. On June 24, 1947, the first mediatized sighting would earn them the name of 'flying saucers'.

During the war in the Pacific in 1945, the USAF tried to bring down one of these Foo Fighters. The UFO took down a number of planes with it. The submarine Zeus Faber was sent to salvage it; the cover story was that the downed planes were carrying the third atom bomb bound to Japan and the Zeus Faber was going to recover it. Once on site, the Black Oil of the UFO took control of the sub's Captain. This, coupled with leaking radioactivity and the danger of Japanese patrols on the surface, resulted in mutiny; the Black Oil was made to leave the Captain's body. Of the sub's crew, only 7 survived the radiation emitted by the downed UFO. The last irradiated sailor died in 1953, after being interviewed by 3 men (William Mulder and CGB Spender among them). This was the first source of information the government had of the Black Oil, and the only source for a long time.

The Roswell Crash

The famed incident at Roswell, New Mexico, on July 2, 1947, involved a crash of a UFO. The US military recovered the remains of the craft and the bodies of its occupants. The truth was hidden to the public, and as this was the first crash cover-up, it was not executed as well as those that would follow. The cover story involved a weather balloon. The organization known as Majestic 12, or MJ-12, was created, composed of high-ranking military and top-notch scientists that dealt with the hiding and study of the alien craft and bodies.

The USAF quickly saw that technological superiority over the Soviets could be obtained through study of the UFO. Research began to manufacture a military UFO by retro-engineering the Roswell craft in top secret military bases like Groom Lake in Nevada and Ellens in Idaho. The military were more than happy to shoot down UFOs, feeding their retro-engineers with more material from which to create more breakthrough technology -- a technology that would be used in new military aircraft or that would be developed in cooperation with major civilian aerospace companies.

The cataloguing and SEP

With the beginning of the Cold War, fear of an impending nuclear holocaust took over the public and the political figures. So that a deceased could be identified after a nuclear attack, genetic information had to be gathered. The US government ordered the creation of a secret database of tissue samples from every citizen. The samples were taken very officially upon the smallpox inoculation, which became obligatory under the blessing of the World Health Organization as part of the SEP (Smallpox Eradication Program). William Mulder was among the persons who conducted the cataloguing.

Strughold, a rich German industrialist protected in the USA under Project Paper Clip, had made many strategically placed contacts. He furthered the favors of government by giving away one of his mines in Virginia and converting it into a storing facility for the cataloguing database.

Governmental and UNO measures

Increasing numbers of UFO sightings in the June-July 1947 period and the Roswell crash buzz drew public attention to the UFO phenomenon. As a consequence, "Project Sign" was created in late 1947 as an official US government study, backed by the USAF. Extensive research only resulted in the truth getting out, that these were real crafts, certainly not of Soviet origin and of unknown but probably menacing purposes. As an attempt to bury the truth behind a haze of paperwork, "Sign" was renamed to "Project Grudge" in late 1948, then again to "Project Blue Book" in 1952.

Analyzing the data gathered in the Roswell craft, the threat the aliens represented was quite obvious. There was a global colonization ahead, it would take place in 2012, it was well planned and mankind was not in the least prepared to counter it. It became a matter of national security to hide the real nature of the UFOs from the general public in order to prevent mass panic. The threat the aliens represented was greater than any feud between the USA and the USSR. The matter was secretly brought to the United Nations Organization: the USA, the USSR, Britain, France, the two Germanies (GDR & FRG) and China all participated in a UN council. The Security Resolution 1013 was voted: any country that would capture an alien being would have to exterminate it.

The birth of a conspiracy

In the USA, on the more hidden side of things, following the Roswell events, the highest spheres of power deemed it necessary to act against the alien invasion. More had to be learned of the enemy, it was necessary to gather information. In the late 40s and early 50s, teaming up with the members of MJ-12 came many government officials, from the Department of Defense or the State Department. Among them, CGB Spender, William Mulder and the man we only know as Deep Throat. This core unit was top secret and was given broad leeway by their superiors. Their task was to learn everything of the alien presence on Earth and hopefully find a way to defend ourselves against 'them': an investigative unit with executive power and all the US government's agencies at its disposal.

The Native American language Navajo was used for keeping records of all of this group's doings. Navajo had already been used by the US military during WWII as a coding method, very successful because of its uniqueness. Some of the same 'code talkers' translators were used again, like Albert Hosteen.

In the same way the alien menace had to be kept secret, the public was not to know the actions of this group. In a delicate game of information even among the highest power spheres of the government and military, very few people were allowed to know that there were aliens in the first place, and among them few knew of the Security Resolution 1013. Even fewer knew what the investigative group was up to.

The conspiracy within the conspiracy

For those unaware of the reality of alien presence on Earth, a very simple way to cover up governmental experiments that would not be approved by the civilian population or that had to be kept secret from foreign countries was to make believe that they were conducted by aliens. A systematic effort of covering up any tangible evidence began, along with a campaign of misinforming and discrediting that made ridicule out of any true 'believer', simultaneously discouraging anyone that would want to dig deeper into the web of lies they were building. Fake photos were created, false accounts were circulated and fed to the appropriate media, and hoaxes were meticulously conceived for the sole strategic purpose of being seen by hardcore 'believers'. The USA became the country with by far the most UFO sightings and alien abduction accounts. Those aware of the real aliens would find this strategy useful too: denying the existence of the very being they were after was a way to make the truth of their existence even more improbable.

Project MK-Ultra and mind control

Inspired by mind-control techniques conducted on prisoners of war in the USSR, China and Korea, the CIA began a secret research program on mind control, brain manipulation and mind reading in 1953: Project MK-Ultra. Its many projects involved experimental drugs, torturing, the use of electronic signals, or hypnosis. Project Stargate attempted to develop psychic remote viewing. The truth serum was produced and many civilians and military were experimented on, mostly unwittingly.

The revelation of human experimentation done by the CIA and the Department of Defense to the general public in 1974 effectively ended Project MK-Ultra. But the experiments never ended, taking different names and financing, always with the justification of assuring the USA's superiority over its enemies. Experiments which led to a series of murders encouraged or triggered by everyday electronic devices in 1994 or another in 1996 involving electronic signals added to television transmissions can all be considered as heirs of MK-Ultra.

Hallucinogenic drugs were also developed. In 1989 was tested a drug that could trigger specific hallucinations to the subject: hallucinations of little grey aliens. Such a drug could be very useful to disguise secret governmental operations as the acts of aliens.

Selective memory erasure was also developed by the military, perhaps derived from alien technology found on fallen UFOs. Coupled with drugs and hypnosis, this could firmly convince a test subject of the government that he had been abducted by aliens.

The government continued to be on the watch for scientific discoveries with potential military applications. It tried to salvage, violently sometimes, work in the field of artificial intelligence, human tissue regeneration, or subatomic particles physics.

The xenotransplantation experiments

An experiment led by German doctors brought in the USA through Project Paper Clip was xenotransplantation, the grafting of a species' body part into another species. Only that this experiment involved the grafting of an entire organism, quite possibly alien, perhaps found in the Roswell craft. When the test subjects, unwitting employees of the State Department, tried to revolt, they were declared communists. The witch-hunt led by Senator McCarthy was useful not only to eradicate the Soviet menace in the USA, but also to neutralize an unwanted enemy. If any person was declared as communist by the government, then everyone, government agencies and civilians, were against him and he had no hope of escaping.

The beginnings of genetic engineering: The Lichfield Experiments

Genetic biology was at its beginnings, knowledge of genetics at that time was very small -- DNA was officially discovered in 1944 and its structure was identified in 1953. But already the military applications of genetics were seen: to make a superior soldier, more resistant and more efficient. The Russians began a program of raw eugenics, which is simple crossbreeding in order to isolate specific traits and abilities. In the USA, the Lichfield

Experiments began: the first human clones. The male ones were named Adam, the females Eve. However, an increased chromosome number led to increased violent behavior. Ultimately the project was shot down and the remaining Eves were locked in prison.

First hybridization attempts

Studying the Roswell bodies, the biological hazard of the aliens' presence was identified immediately. It was thought that the colonization would consist in "simply" the Black Oil infecting every human being on Earth. This led the investigative group to believe that a hybrid being was most likely to survive a potential alien biological attack. Moreover, a hybrid would survive conventional (ie, terrestrial) biological warfare and would make a fine "super-soldier". The medical expertise of German and Japanese doctors of Paper Clip was summoned to begin studies on the hybridization technique. The main goal was to create a being immune to the alien biology, "simply" by having its genome integrating both human and alien DNA: an alien/human hybrid.

With experience gained in the Lichfield Experiments and thanks to people like Victor "The Butcher" Klemper, results were considerable. These experiments were not exactly genetic engineering yet, as they only consisted in inoculations of alien material that, it was hoped, would modify the human nature of the test subjects towards something greater. The genetic data gathered at Strughold's mine during the cataloguing of the population was deviated from its original purpose and was used to facilitate the doctors' work in the search for certain genetic profiles.

The Roswell bodies were used to obtain alien tissue. As for the human test subjects, they were found among those whose disappearance would attract the less attention: the poor, the homeless, the insane, the elderly. The dehumanizing code-name for these test subjects was "the Merchandise". Prior to the experiments, every test subject was given a smallpox vaccination that would be used for subsequent identification: indeed, the hybridization process changed the physical appearance of the humans into something close to a grey alien. This among other things was why these experiments were considered a failure. The hybrids were put inside buried train box cars and were exterminated using the gas developed by the Nazis, hydrogen cyanide.

Hybridization attempts did not cease though, as few results as they offered. Dr. Ishimaru, taking on the identity "Shiro Zama", joined the effort in 1965 or earlier. The knowledge gained on human experimentation and human endurance was great, and it came handy when JFK launched the race for landing an American on the Moon. Apollo 11 in 1969 was another victory of the American block over the Soviets.

The Vietnam supersoldiers

Another governmental project to produce a superior soldier was conducted during the War in Vietnam (1965-1973). Conducted on Parris Island, it was based on brain surgery that led to sleep deprivation, and ultimately sleep eradication. The experimental platoon that was sent to Vietnam was highly successful in exterminating Vietnamese, so much so that it went on doing so without orders.

Section 3 : A collaborative Syndicate 1973-1998

The 1973 agreement and Purity Control

The hybridization experiments, which were based on the damaged tissue of the Roswell bodies, were not giving the results that were required and the dedicated scientists, as brilliant as they were, were reaching the limits of human knowledge in genetic engineering. The members of the investigative group, who by now had reached important positions inside the government, were facing a dead end. CGB Spender had a crazy idea: to make a deal with the alien Colonists. Colonization seemed inevitable and resistance futile, in this context maybe mere survival through cooperation with the aliens was all the human race had to hope for.

By making a deal, the conspirators were abandoning all hope of saving all of humanity. They were condemning mankind for their sakes only, and that of their families. A very difficult choice. A majority vote was conducted and it was decided that the aliens would be contacted. William Mulder was the fiercest and apparently the only opponent to this plan, and was still actively opposing it while the contact procedure had begun.

The contact took place in El Rico Air Force Base, on October 13, 1973. To force the deal, the conspirators used the menace of ravaging the Earth under nuclear fire if the aliens refused to comply. The deal was simple: in exchange of their lives, the conspirators would greatly help the aliens to make the way for the colonization. This would be the Project.

The conspirators would only be able to survive as alien/human hybrids, thus the goal of the hybridization experiments would no longer be to create an army of resistant soldiers but to save only the conspirators and their families by developing a way to turn an already fully grown human into a hybrid through gene therapy. This would be the Purity Control project.

The exchange

To help them in the Purity Control task, the aliens delivered the conspirators an alien embryo, fresh tissue that would be more useful than the dead bodies of the Roswell craft. And the aliens gave them the Method, the means with which to fuse genomes and create hybrids; this was only a method and not a way to create the perfect hybrid by gene therapy.

As a guarantee of their faithfulness, the aliens demanded that the conspirators would each deliver them a member of their families. These people would be the main test subjects for the gene therapy hybridization experiments, they would come to be abducted frequently during the following years, and their families would see them only rarely. The giving away of beings so beloved from the conspirators was a very difficult decision and a highly symbolic act which sealed the conspirators' allegiance to the aliens. If the conspirators obeyed, their and their families' lives would be spared in the colonization.

The exchange took place on November 27, 1973, in El Rico Air Force Base -- for all but for Samantha, the daughter of William Mulder. Mulder still was reluctant to go forward and the abduction took place in his own house, with young Fox Mulder witnessing an event that would scar him forever.

The Syndicate goes global

With this move initiated by the investigative group only and not authorized by the government, the conspirators that made this agreement were effectively acting against their own government (and accessorially against the rest of mankind). They were becoming independent of any government or institution. Officially, they kept their positions in US governmental agencies, which meant that they could use their lobbying power to use key people for their own agenda or to finance the Project.

The colonization would be global. The conspirators had to enlist the help of their contacts abroad, and use their political and economic influence also. Many officials from foreign governments joined them, extending their sphere of influence to the Senate (Senators Matheson and Sorenson), the UNO, different Embassies, from countries that had belonged to the Axis (Germany, Italy, Japan, with which they were already in contact through Project Paper Clip), and from all over the world -- or at least from all over the Western block. A global conspiracy was born: the Syndicate. It is very likely that all the members of this consortium were asked to give away one of their family members also to seal the agreement with the aliens.

Conrad Strughold, who already had many contacts in the US government, became a member of this conspiracy and a major financier of the Syndicate's activities. Probably fleeing prosecution for illegal affairs in the USA (involving financing or human experimentation), Strughold was forced to leave American soil and exile himself in Tunisia. He eventually assumed leadership of the Syndicate in 1990. From there he supervised all Syndicate activities, receiving and sending information through channels he established, and making a trip to London for a meeting if necessary. The main part of the Syndicate elders usually met in an apartment in 46th street, New York to take important decisions.

The names of the core group of the Syndicate are mostly unknown: the "Cigarette-Smoking Man" (C.G.B. Spender), the "Well-Manicured Man" (from England), the "Elders". William Mulder, Alvin Kurtzweil and "Deep Throat" all resigned from the activities of the Syndicate in the following years in disagreement with the Syndicate's policy, desperate that collaboration was now overshadowing resistance; all of them continued resistance in their own ways. Personal relations and private agendas would continue playing a big role in the events that would shape the world's future.

The Project

The Syndicate's task was to prepare the way for colonization. This meant that they had to find and set up a way to infect the entire human population with the Black Oil virus, when the time was right. It was thought that colonization meant that humans would become mindless hosts to the Black Oil.

The Syndicate experimented with ways to spread an infectious disease and studied the speed and geography of an outbreak using terrestrial diseases. In 1995, a lethal disease from Central America spread by the insect Faciphaga emasculata was purposely spread in the USA to assess the speed with which the appointed agencies acted and contained a disease.

After much research, it was decided that the virus could be spread more effectively by bees carrying the virus in their venom. A field test on a South Carolina town in 1997 confirmed the infectious efficiency of this spreading vector. For this test, a very virulent genetically engineered strain of the variola virus (smallpox) was used to act as the Black Oil virus. Indeed, the alien virus would have to be released only when the time came, until that time substitutes were used. Variola was chosen because of its virulence and because it is a disease now rare since it has been eradicated by man, thanks to the Smallpox Eradication Program of vaccinations. The Syndicate, through Dr. Charne-Sayre, was lobbying to have the last remaining samples of the variola virus destroyed, making a reappearance of variola even more difficult to fight against.

The bees would get the virus thanks to their natural function of pollination. Transgenic plants were developed so that they would carry a virus in their pollen. First, ginseng was used to create a variation of the plant carrying the variola virus. A culture of this ginseng, pollinated by bees, was created in Alberta, Canada, in 1996. Later, ginseng was abandoned in favor of corn crops. By 1998 there existed many cornfields carrying the Black Oil virus across the world, notably in Texas and Tunisia.

The abductees

At the same time, the Syndicate continued its work on hybridization with renewed strength, using the experts that had worked on hybridization, like Drs Klemper, Openshaw, Kurtzweil and Ishimaru, or enlisting others, like Dr. Scanlon. After 25 years of experiments since Roswell, another period of 25 years had begun.

The new Syndicate found its test subjects for the hybridization program among the civilians all over the world. The Syndicate abducted people and experimented on them, returning them (if at all) in a poor physical condition and with little (if any) recollection of what had happened to them. With the new knowledge on genetic engineering provided by the aliens, the tissue database made for post-holocaust identification in Strughold's mine in the 1950s could finally be used to its full potential to serve the needs of the hybridization experiments: genetic data on human test subjects. A photograph featuring many conspiracy members was taken in 1973 to commemorate the conversion of the mine. This data mine was also accessible to the aliens, who ran checks and used the data to abduct these test subjects also. The medical results of every abduction relevant for the hybridization were used to update the mine's files.

The Social Security Administration was concurrently used as a means to keep the files up to date with every person's medical history.

The experiments conducted on the abductees consisted of the insertion of alien DNA into each abductee's DNA, following the Method, in different proportions and segments, and...see the result. The experiments were conducted in centers led by doctors with close ties to the Syndicate, often aboard train wagons that could be tracked from satellite and moved around the country.

The competing agendas

From 1973 on, the stance of the Syndicate was in direct contradiction with the "official" stance of the world's biggest governments, defined by Security Resolution 1013. The Syndicate was not powerful enough to counter a UNO resolution: the downed aliens would have to be killed. In fact, the Syndicate's field of operations was often very narrow, taking place in hidden labs or secret train boxcars. Even though it had deep contacts in the Department of Defense and could at times call out the help of a black ops team, the Syndicate was not in control of the military. And the military would go on shooting down alien crafts any time they could, becoming more efficient at covering up the salvaging operations each time.

The Pentagon conspiracy

It was in the Syndicate's interest to further the discrediting of the believers in extraterrestrial life and to maintain the belief among many high-placed government officials that this alien activity was just a smokescreen for the illegal actions of the government. Hiding the truth under so many layers of lies added to the confusion and made the Syndicate the only holder (and maker) of the truth, and thus of power. The X-Files department of the FBI, opened in 1991, was part of this discrediting program and could be a fine tool of misinformation. The Syndicate would also use the firm Roush Technologies as a front thanks to which it could remunerate many of its key contacts in various agencies, like the FBI or the DoD, as a reward for the "services" they could offer.

With science and technology advancing at such fast rates, the people working at the Department of Defense (DoD) and its research facilities at the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA) were convinced that there were no aliens and became experts at manipulating the general opinion into making the hardcore believers the laughed at fringes of society.

During the Gulf War, the military got hold of what the Russians called "Black Cancer", weaponized Black Oil. With the advancement of biological warfare and genetic manipulation, it could be conceived that this was a biological entity engineered by the Russians and not of extraterrestrial origin.

For the Syndicate, it was one of the too few sources for "pure" Black Oil not in the form of alien tissue; Roush Technologies was activated to get in hold of it. With further manipulation mixing the Purity genes with human genes and probably other species' too, DARPA in cooperation with Roush genetically engineered a chimera, an artificial being that had the appearance of a grey alien and a biology close to a human, alive only for the time span it would take for it to grow to a full size. These fake bodies could be used in elaborate hoaxes for believers to see and spread the word of a so-called alien presence. To develop this organism, many of the same abductees of the Syndicate experiments were used, mainly women for the first embryonic growth stages of the organism. Experiments took place inside DoD research facilities, close to the Pentagon. More abductees were 'used' in thousands of human experimentation projects developing biological warfare.

The timetable

From the beginning, the final date for the colonization had been set by the aliens as December 22, 2012 AD. The Syndicate had until that date to develop the method of hybridization by gene therapy and save themselves. The moment the discovery would be made, the Syndicate and the families of the conspirators would surrender to the aliens and be hybridized; at that point there would be no turning back, no other hope for resistance.

Given that an alien/human hybrid, immune to the Black Oil, would be developed through the Syndicate, the alien Colonists thought of using the abductees as a slave race. When the time would come, the abductees would also be turned into hybrids that would survive the colonization and serve the aliens. This slave race would also be used to police, search and destroy any potential pockets of human resistance to the Colonists that would fight, guerilla-like; the slave race would deal with the terrestrial equivalent of a problem already encountered by the Colonists: the Faceless Rebels.

In the final stages right before the colonization, the abductees would be all summoned to specific abduction sites all over the world, the Lighthouses, where they would be abducted and turned into hybrids: places like Skyland Mountain in Virginia, Ruskin Dam in Pennsylvania, a site in Kazakhstan and many others across the globe.

For the USA, the fateful day would proceed as follows. During a national holiday (the holiday before Christmas 2012), the bees would be released upon the world and the colonization would begin. The resulting massive infection would make the President declare a state of emergency, at which time the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) should assume absolute power over the land. The conspirators, hiding behind strong lobbies tied to FEMA ever since they instigated FEMA under Jimmy Carter in 1979, would then function as the acting government. Through similar processes all over the world, the Syndicate would assume the position of rulers of the world, only to leave it be taken over by their superiors, the Colonists.

The cloned hybrids and the Alien Bounty Hunter

Before creating a hybrid by gene therapy, the Syndicate experimented with the hybrid creation method with a much easier task: creating a simple hybrid, a being born hybrid and not turned into hybrid.

The human biological material for the creation of a hybrid was human ova. During their abduction, in the Lombard Research Facility, the ova of certain women abductees were taken using radiation for hyperovulation, rendering the women barren. The human egg was then enucleated and a genetically engineered hybrid nucleus was inserted in the newly formed embryo. The hybrid was grown in vats and tanks. The resulting prototype was cloned conventionally and a series of cloned hybrids was obtained (as it is much easier to clone than to hybridize). Often, the original family members of the conspirators were used as source of the genetic material on the human side. Hybrids present a biology similar to that of the race of the Shapeshifters, indicating their common origins from Purity. A successful hybrid would present all of the following characteristics and abilities: a human physiology (appearance) but an alien biology (green blood), be immune to the Black Oil virus, to breathe underwater, to heal oneself and others, to shapeshift, to read minds. All hybrids have a sensitive spot at the base of the neck and most of them can only be killed using an alien stiletto, like the Shapeshifters.

Lots of more or less successful hybrids were developed over the years, from 1995 but very possibly beginning from earlier on. The hybrids that were grown, otherwise useless to the aliens and the Syndicate, were used as workforce for tasks too menial and repetitive for anybody else to take care of. They were assigned in clinics in proximity to human biological material, in research centers taking care of the growth of their own, in national agencies updating data for the Syndicate, in crop fields attending the Project.

This slave existence urged the hybrids to have a rebellious attitude. To settle any problems of this kind, the Syndicate summoned the help of the aliens, who sent an Alien Bounty Hunter (ABH) on Earth, equipped with a stiletto, with the task to exterminate the rebellious hybrids. As more of these problems kept popping up, the ABH eventually gave his stiletto to the Syndicate for it to deal with its problems internally without the help of the Colonists.

The first successful engineered hybrid was given the name Jeremiah Smith, in 1996.

The implants and the cancer

Every abductee was also subcutaneously implanted with small electronic devices, or implants. They could be of terrestrial origin (a simple metal detector would reveal their presence), placed at the base of the neck, or of alien origin (hardly detectable) and could be found anywhere in the body.

Every abductee came to the hands of the aliens at least once for him/her to be implanted. These implants served as tracking devices but also as information conduits: the abductees could be ordered to do something or go someplace; this information would pop up as a vague awareness or attraction. Since the implant was very closely tied with the nervous system of the abductee, it could also be the source of hallucinations, heightened by the circumstances and the abductee's previous experiences. The implants received their input through radio signals emitted from the alien crafts or terrestrial intelligence satellites.

They could also store large quantities of information, perhaps even every action and thought of the abductee; they also served as a database that kept count of all the experiments made on the abductee. The terrestrial implants were tiny microchips manufactured in Japan that were imported in the USA by Dr. Ishimaru, and implanted on the abductees on the train wagons that served as laboratories.

Many abductees got aware of their (terrestrial) implants and had them removed. With evidence of their claims of abduction and experimentation in their hands, these abductees had to be eliminated. Another function was added to the terrestrial implants, that of regulating the growth of an organism. This organism was the chimera developed by the Department of Defense: stem cells of this organism were placed in the abductee, and its development was hindered by the implant. Once the implant was removed and the controlling mechanism was lifted, the chimera would start growing. This development was perceived as a tumor and the abductee would be diagnosed with cancer. Because of the strategic placement of this organism, inside the brain cavity, the cancer would be terminal and the abductee would stand no chance of survival. However, the process could be reversed if another implant would be placed again in the abductee; such implants were stored inside the DoD headquarters, the Pentagon.

Hybridization experiments in the open air

The Syndicate also experimented gene therapy on larger populations, with the (potential) hybrids not in enclosed labs, but with not too many results.

In 1987, a group of children were unwittingly inoculated with alien genetic material (or its derivatives), disguised as vitamin shots. In 1994, a similar experiment took place in Delta Glen County, only that this time the input of alien genetic material came also from the meat they ate: the cattle were also given inoculations, disguised as growth hormones. The children did develop heightened resistance to diseases, but also developed violent behavior and hallucinations, perhaps the first signs of heightened brain activity. The implantation of the religious sect "Red Museum" in Delta Glen County was favored; the vegetarian members of this sect would be used as a reference group.

From 1989 to 1992 ran an experiment in Bellefleur where youth from the same class were being abducted and given inoculations of alien material. This gave few results but for the post-mortem transformation of the body of some into a grey morphology. Further experiments run from 1992 to 1999 resulted in heightened brain activity.

The gene therapy hybrids

Around 1994, Dr. Berube, working unwittingly for the Syndicate, used his experience with working on monkeys to create the first alien/human hybrids through gene therapy. The 6 hybrids were initially his patients and friends, terminally ill; the hybridization cured them and gave them great physical strength. They presented alien blood chemistry, quite toxic to the humans, and a sensitive spot at the base of the neck (though a stiletto was not necessary to kill them). However Dr. Berube's work was so successful that it was going too fast: the Syndicate did not want the successful hybrid to be created too soon! Berube was killed and his work shot down.

After years of work in his facility disguised as a research center for Hansen's disease, Dr. Ishimaru also developed a quite successful hybrid thanks to radiation treatment, immune to all biological agents. Ishimaru betrayed the Syndicate and tried to deliver this hybrid to his home government of Japan but he was betrayed and killed. His work was destroyed; his research however was recovered by the Syndicate.

The hybrid babies program

After 1994 began a program that tried to create a hybrid with gene therapy but beginning with a being that was already "lightly" hybrid.

For each experiment less and less alien material was used for the creation of this being, and work was concentrated more and more on the gene therapy aspect, with the purpose of reaching a point where no initial alien genes would be necessary and gene therapy alone would suffice.

These beings were the result of mixing material from an engineered hybrid with material from the ova of the women abductees. The result was an embryo that could not be grown in a vat or a tank but needed a surrogate mother to grow in. These babies were more human than alien, and it was their subsequent treatment with alien genes that approached them progressively to a successful hybrid.

Section 4 : The hidden agendas 1996-2000

The search for a vaccine

With the 1973 agreement, the Syndicate had agreed to cooperate and not resist the alien Colonists. Those who would be saved in the end would only be the members of the Syndicate and their families. But from the beginning there were voices of dissent: not to cooperate, to resist until the very end, to try to save everyone, the world. It was William Mulder's idea to try and develop a vaccine that would protect a human from the Black Oil, that would kill the Black Oil once it entered the body of an inoculated human. In a war that was to be biological, a vaccine would be they key to survival.

With the majority vote of 1973, the Syndicate chose collaboration. But Bill Mulder still held on the idea, and his project survived in the mind of the conspirators as a way out that could be handy when the time would come. As much as the collaboration with the aliens was a secret from public and government, any research for a vaccine would be even more secret as it would have to be done without the aliens' knowledge. If the Colonists were to know of this, the agreement would be broken and the conspirators exterminated.

Thus progress towards a vaccine was slow: officially, priority was given to the hybridization research. The strategy the Syndicate chose to follow was to do the Colonists' bidding but to deceive them in secret. The hybridization program was never allowed to succeed: research was done, but every time it came too close to obtaining the successful gene therapy hybrid, the work was destroyed and colonization was stalled. This bought precious time for the development of a vaccine, the true goal in which few people ended up believing in.

What the vaccine research lacked most was source material. Alien tissue and biological material was mainly used with the hybridization experiments, and what a vaccine program needed most was crude Black Oil in its primeval form. That, the Syndicate didn't have, and its knowledge of Black Oil remained very basic for a long time.

Behind the Iron Curtain

The Syndicate was a thing of the West; the USSR was necessarily left out during the Cold War. Some time in the 1980s, geological surveys in Tunguska led to the discovery of the weakened, coma-inducing Black Oil trapped in the rocks. The Russians started extracting this "Black Cancer" from the Tunguska rocks: using any workforce available (local population, prisoners), they built a gulag in the vicinities of the mining works and made it a center for biowarfare research. Soon enough, they were able to use Black Cancer as a biological weapon. They provided to Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein; its efficiency was proven on US troops during the Gulf War.

In order to protect their own soldiers, the Russians started searching for a cure for the Black Cancer. The same workforce that was used to mine Black Oil-rich rock was used as test subjects for the experiments to develop a vaccine against this Black Oil. Benefiting from a weakened form of the alien virus and a limitless number of prisoners, all in a remote place of the globe, the Russians were able to make progress. After sacrificing hundreds, perhaps thousands, of their prisoners, by 1998 they had a treatment that was in no way a vaccine but it was effective enough.

For cataloguing their population and their medical history, the Russians used the same system as in the USA: identification through smallpox vaccinations. The vaccination was done on the upper left arm. The only effective way that the local Tunguska population saw to escape being imprisoned and experimented on was to cut off their arm, thus making themselves untrackable.

In effect, there was a Western Syndicate, based in the USA and supposed to control the entire world, and a Russian conspiracy that had something the Americans didn't: Black Oil and a vaccine research program. The Russians sent their agents Marita Covarrubias and Alexander Krycek to infiltrate the western block, spies who would have to report back to the mother country. Both were able to reach key positions in prominent agencies and the Syndicate. But their loyalties were unstable: Covarrubias became a double agent for the Syndicate and Krycek a free agent selling information. In the long run, both of them served no one but themselves and the ultimate goal of resistance to the Colonists.

The American effort

After the end of the Cold War, the Syndicate extended its sphere of influence to the former Soviet Union. Aware that the Russians had a source for Black Oil, they activated their contacts in Russia (American ambassadors, Russian diplomats) and found out about the Tunguska experiments. With much precaution, these contacts were able to smuggle rocks containing Black Oil from Tunguska to American soil. On a very tight committee composed in particular by C.G.B. Spender (Cigarette-Smoking Man) and the Well-Manicured Man and headed by virologist Dr. Bonita Charne-Sayre, the western vaccination program started taking shape. The experiments were conducted on elderly people in convalescence homes. By the end of 1996, they were able to prevent the coma induced by the Black Oil, but not to kill the virus.

The Russians came to know of this theft and recontacted Krycek over this matter. Krycek, with the help of former KGB agent Vassily Peskow, was able to terminate the American experiments; Dr. Charne-Sayre was killed and the smuggled rocks were destroyed.

In 1998, Krycek initiated a chain of events that led to the Syndicate acquiring the Russian vaccine; with their own previous experience and experimenting on Covarrubias they were able to improve it still. The result of world-wide human effort was an inoculation that exterminated the Black Oil from the infected human one-time only but did not provide immunity. It was notably used on FBI agent Dana Scully inside the alien environment of Base 1 at Antarctica.

The discovery of an underground deposit in Blackwood, Texas gave the Syndicate ample raw material for a vaccine research. Roush Technologies was the company responsible for the research.

The nanotechnology

Retro-engineering of alien technology not only brought advances in military aircraft but also in the field of nanotechnology, thanks to the growing knowledge in the manipulation of matter in the molecular level as of the late 1990s. From self-replicating repairing technology were developed nanorobots that could be inserted in the bloodstream and controlled by radio waves. These robots could be used to kill someone, but they also offered a very good potential to become the ultimate antibiotic. Indeed, nanorobots could be designed to be able to track and destroy certain entities inside the human body: such an entity could be the Black Oil. This nanotechnology could become the much sought-for vaccine.

It was with this in mind that Conrad Strughold tried to export this technology from the USA and bring it to Tunisia, using a funding bill that would provide medical technology to Third World countries through the WHO. What became of this is unknown, as other events occurred that probably pushed these matters into oblivion.

The Colonists' true purposes

Since 1947, human world leaders and the Syndicate had believed that the colonization would result in the human race being enslaved by the alien Colonists. The nature of the Black Oil hinted that humans would become hosts to Purity, and the Syndicate worked towards efficiently spreading the Purity virus on humans when the day would come.

But the 1998 Blackwood incident revealed that humans would not serve as a host race: they would all be exterminated! If Purity willed to do so, infection by the Black Oil could trigger a gestation of an alien entity inside the body of the host; hatching of this entity through the chest would lead the human host to his death; the alien entity would grow to become a grey alien Colonist. Mass spreading of the Black Oil would exterminate every single human infected, the sole survivors being the hybrids and a limited human resistance. The Syndicate considered this complete turnaround of events as a betrayal; the Well-Manicured Man refused collaborating any longer and sacrificed himself to help make the truth known. But at this point there was little the Syndicate could do to resist.

A struggle for Heaven and Earth

In 1998 also appeared on Earth the Faceless Rebels, the remaining survivors of the colonization of the race of the Shapeshifters, still actively fighting against Purity's actions in any way possible. On Earth, they saw fighting against the Syndicate and the agreement with the Colonists as a way to stall colonization and put aback Purity's plans.

They sabotaged the communications routes with the abductees' implants and called for gatherings of abductees, where the abductees were relentlessly burned to death.

Purity did not stay idle and stroke back. A war had begun between Colonists and Rebels, and the Syndicate had to choose sides. The Syndicate captured the Rebel leader from his downed ship; by choosing to deliver him to the Colonists they effectively refused any kind of deal with the resisting Rebels and remained sided with their future masters. The Rebel leader was rescued by his own people.

The Cassandra Spender debacle

Cassandra Spender, C.G.B.'s wife, was one of the original Syndicate family members surrendered to the Colonists in 1973. In 1999 she became the culmination of the hybridization effort, the first successful alien/human hybrid by gene therapy. The Syndicate members had to choose whether to destroy and hide this achievement or surrender her and themselves to the Colonists, a point of no return for colonization. But the Rebels chose for them; they started the burnings again and attracted unnecessary attention to Cassandra; they offered a last chance for an alliance with the Syndicate but they were met with the same rejection.

Expecting to meet the Colonists and fulfill the terms of the agreement, the Syndicate members and their families gathered in El Rico Air Force Base. The Rebels were the only ones to appear, burning them all down and putting an end to 25 years of collaboration and striking a severe blow to the colonization preparation. The Syndicate was dead!

All bets are off

The survivors of the Rebels' coup were few. C.G.B. Spender and Diana Fowley escaped together. Spender went on to make an attempt to turn himself into a hybrid by brain surgery with his illegitimate son Fox Mulder, but this operation failed and he became terminally ill.

He lost all hope for mankind and had rather see it crumble with him than to resist until the very end. He tried to revive the project but he was stopped by Krycek.

Krycek and Covarrubias stayed true to themselves by forming a core of resistance, possibly instigating an alliance between the Russian conspiracy and the Rebels. The effect that any kind of resistance will have is open to debate; however, the Colonists have not given up on the colonization Project and have picked things up where the Syndicate left off. Colonization seems inevitable.

The world of starlight

Half-hidden among all these materialistic events is a world of spirits. The afterlife, immaterial sentient beings, Walk-ins are all proof of these multi-layered planes of existence, if one is receptive enough to perceive them. Walk-ins are good-intentioned spirits that are able to alleviate someone from extreme suffering by taking him from the material world to the spiritual world; they are also known as guardian angels. The dead can also appear to the living and communicate with them. The intentions and the effects that all of these can have to the future course of events is only for us to see. However, the Walk-ins announce that a new age, the Age of Aquarius, will rise on December 22, 2012 AD.

Section 5 : Back to Plan A 2000-2012

The Supersoldiers Project

After the Syndicate was more or less neutralized, the aliens had to take matters into their own hands to prepare for the colonization. The agreement forced onto them in 1973 was no longer in hand, they could go back to their original plan: the Supersoldiers.

The Supersoldiers are creations of the alien Colonists; they are humans whose DNA has been deeply modified by a version of the Black Oil virus and further compounded with iron, they are virtually indestructible, they have an iron vertebra (which is the cause for small lumps on the base of their neck) from which they can reconstruct themselves and they have an alien consciousness which prevails over their human will. The human that is to be replicated into a Supersoldier must undergo painful and very long procedures; it would seem that only people with a certain genetic profile are suitable to be replicated. Research to create a faster way to replicate and a way to replicate anybody seem to be ongoing.

Their goal is to prepare colonization. Following replication, the Supersoldiers infiltrate human society and try to attain high position of power. The first Supersoldiers may have appeared as early as 1947; the infiltration never stopped despite the agreement with the Syndicate. A second wave of Supersoldiers was created in the late 1980s-1990s. The destruction of the Syndicate Elders in 1999 effectively activated these sleeper agents, with Supersoldiers filling the power vacuum left over by the elders in their official positions. In 2000-2001 a third wave was created from the replication of what used to be abductees. By 2002 they were a very powerful and influential group infiltrated in all governmental agencies: the Treasury Department and the FBI ("Toothpick Man"), the NSA ("Shadow Man"), the intelligence community and the Mount Weather Complex (Knowle Rohrer) or the Department of Justice (Shannon McMahon) -- but they were also simple civilians in less prominent positions, fulfilling groundwork operations (Billy Miles). After the colonization they are destined to become a slave race of their masters, the Colonists.

'Organic' Supersoldiers: Zeus Genetics

Zeus Genetics was a fertility clinic, employing Drs. Lev and Parenti, which used its official line of business to cover for the work it did on the account of the Syndicate. Using alien genetic material, they created essentially alien babies implanted, gestated and born from human wombs. Ex-abductees left barren were used as surrogate mothers; ex-Marine Duffy Haskel infiltrated MUFON groups on the Syndicate's behalf and brought them to Zeus Genetics. The babies, stillborn, were used to provide alien tissue and genetic material for further babies and experiments on hybridization with other branches under the Syndicate.

After the Syndicate fell, Supersoldiers replaced Zeus Genetics' superiors; Zeus Genetics unwittingly came under the influence of the Supersoldiers. The goal became to create a Supersoldier baby out of genetic manipulation, without the complex time consuming procedure necessary for an adult replication. This research was presented by the Supersoldiers as steps towards the creation of a perfect human being with no frailties, but it was really research to create an 'organic' version of the Supersoldier, as much alien as themselves. The Supersoldiers put an end to Zeus Genetics when another concurrent project, the Valor Victor, succeeded before them.

'Organic' Supersoldiers: the chloramine babies

Similarly to Zeus Genetics, the top secret Navy research ship Valor Victor was used by the Supersoldiers to research a way to create 'organic' Supersoldiers. The Valor Victor succeeded in creating such a technique by using a modified version of the chemical additive and disinfectant to the public water supply, chloramine. The chloramine would carry a version of the Black Oil virus which would trigger a gestation inside a woman. With continuous ingestion of water throughout the fetus's and the baby's life, the virus would progressively modify the baby's genome and turn it into a Supersoldier. Ex-abductee (and not barren) women, identified through the implants in their necks, were the targets for these apparently miraculous gestations. This technique led to the creation of a whole generation of future Supersoldier babies, born in 2001. These babies exhibited telekinetic powers early on in their development. On the day of the colonization they will probably be used to eradicate any kind of human resistance thanks to their privileged position inside human societies and their apparently innocent appearance.

Magnetite

A specific form of the iron oxide magnetite can affect alien technology, from ships to Supersoldiers. The magnetite is believed to interact electromagnetically with the iron that is compounded in all alien technology. Magnetite is the only known way to destroy a Supersoldier. The source of this form of magnetite on Earth is mostly from crashed meteors, which makes it very rare. Magnetite may have been the reason why the Black Oil in the Tunguska meteor crash was weakened. Magnetite can also be effective in a suspended solution form that is suitable for injection. The Roswell crash revealed this weakness to the US government, however its rarity made it an unsuitable tool for resistance.

Natural immunity

Various cosmic events such as the crash of meteorites containing Black Oil and magnetite have come to influence the biology of humans through shock mutations or prolonged exposure. A group of humans in Asia came to become immune to the Black Oil: once it would enter their body it would be killed and expelled. Thanks to a small amount of cross-breeding, the descendants of this group remained genetically pure and still exhibited similar traits. Descendants in the Tunguska region were used in the Russian conspiracy's experiments with the Black Oil and may have been the cause for the creation of the vaccine against it. Descendants in the Philippines could exhibit faculties of alien origin such as mind reading (Gibson Praise). Migration through the Bering Strait thousands of years ago brought descendants to America. It is possible that the Anasazi were immune to the alien virus; their survival in proximity with the aliens allowed for alien cultural elements (such as writing and beliefs) to be passed on to them. Because of their immunity, many of them were abducted and executed; the remainder realized the aliens feared the same form of magnetite that was present in New Mexico and retrieved in that area, only to be starved out. A group of Mexican Indians, the Huichol, still are naturally immune to the Black Oil to this day.

The Prophecy and William

The aliens have specific plans for the future. Through their Ships, they have carried out the plan of the creation of mankind over millions of years and prepared colonization. The plans they have for the immediate future are as solid as what has come to pass. Their godlike powers can only be interpreted by inferior human minds in ways that only approach the truth; also, the information that is passed on to humans from the aliens and the Ships is only what the aliens choose to be. Thus, what we know of these plans should be treated with caution. Their plans have come to be known to humans as prophecies. Through various contacts over human history, parts of alien lore have survived in human cultures, notably in Northern America. The Native American tribe of the Anasazi, and the Navajo after them, use writing that is similar to the alien one. One of these prophecies is the fixed date for colonization, which marks the end date of the Mayan calendar.

Another prophecy is that a chosen one will become the leader of the colonization. However, he may be influenced by his father and follow a different path which might ultimately ruin the plans for colonization. The Colonists, and the Supersoldiers under them, work and strive for this leader to be on their side. The Anasazi only kept the human side of the prophecy in their lore, hoping that this leader will become a savior for mankind.

This important person proved to be William, the son of FBI Agents Fox Mulder and Dana Scully. Scully, left barren from previous experiments, was given her fertility back through contact with an alien Ship, which gave the child the special status of being brought into existence through the 'divine' deeds of the Ship. His subsequent conception was natural. After his conception, William was added in the chloramine program; the chloramine slowly worked his progressive conversion into a Supersoldier. This process was cut short by an injection of magnetite by Jeffrey Spender, which irrevocably eliminated traces of alien biology in him. William was given up for adoption, making his whereabouts unknown. However, his existence is still subject to the prophecy until the date of the colonization, where one of two possible outcomes will be decided.

December 22, 2012

The long-before planned date for the final alien invasion.

Section 6 : Destinies 1992-2008

A family deeply rooted in the conspiracy

C.G.B. Spender and William Mulder worked in the State Department since as far back as the late 1940s-early 1950s; early in their careers they were involved in the group entrusted with research in the future alien menace, which allowed them to grow in the circles of intelligence and top-secret projects. C.G.B. married Cassandra and William married Tena. C.G.B. and Tena had a short-lived but passionate affair, which left Tena pregnant. The identity of the real father was hidden to William when the child, Fox, was born and brought up in the Mulder family. C.G.B. and Cassandra later became the parents of Jeffrey; William and Tena became the parents of Samantha.

C.G.B. was perhaps the instigator of the collaborative proposal that led to the creation of the Syndicate in 1973. To seal the deal with the aliens in 1973, C.G.B. surrendered his wife Cassandra. Bill would have surrendered Fox, but C.G.B. convinced him otherwise, probably revealing who the real father was; Bill gave up Samantha. Bill's remorse over decades of experimentation on humans and moral discomfort regarding collaboration with the aliens led him to leave the Syndicate, not before launching one last project for resistance: research into a vaccine against the Black Oil. Since then, Bill groomed high hopes for his children (biological or 'adoptive'): for Samantha, he hoped that she would survive colonization in the form of an alien/human hybrid (as herself or as a clone); for Fox, he hoped that he would grow to expose and thwart the plans of C.G.B., the Syndicate and the aliens. His later attitude towards his son was accordingly harsh, in order to stiffen him to fight the future. Samantha's abduction led to the divorce of Tena and Bill.

Samantha was taken away from the Mulders to live with the Spenders; Cassandra and Samantha continued to be abducted and be experimented on. Eventually, in 1979, Samantha was 'taken' by the Walk-ins and thus departed from the physical plane, essentially dying; this disappearance was mysterious even for C.G.B., who came to believe she was dead.

Fox William Mulder, 1961-1992

Fox Mulder was born on October 13, 1961. The event that marked his life was being the only witness to the abduction of his sister Samantha by aliens when he was 12. Mulder went on to study psychology and entered the FBI in 1986; he was assigned to the violent crimes unit and was considered brilliant by his coworkers. It was not until 1989 that he stumbled in a case involving governmental conspiracies and mind control, a case where he also met the future Lone Gunmen, a trio of conspiracy 'freaks' who would become close allies to Mulder. After this, Mulder enlisted the help of Dr. Heitz Werber to recollect the memories of his sister's abduction through regression hypnosis. Quickly enough, Mulder became obsessed with anything paranormal, conspiratorial and extraterrestrial, earning him the nickname "Spooky" in the FBI. A "believer", though not inclined towards religion.

Only FBI Agent Diana Fowley stood by him; they developed a strong bond which evolved in a romantic relationship. In 1990 they discovered the X-Files, cases the FBI has deemed unsolved and that involved unexplained or supernatural phenomena, cases on which FBI Agent Arthur Dales had worked on in the 1950s. It is then that C.G.B. Spender became interested in Mulder's case. He saw the X-Files as both a means through which believers could be discredited to the greater benefit of the Syndicate and illegal governmental deeds, but also as a means to prepare Mulder as a possible future heir of C.G.B.. In this rite of passage of sorts, Spender approached Fowley and took her under his influence. Spender, as a Treasury Department executive powerful in the FBI, allowed the X-Files to be opened in 1991; Mulder and Fowley were assigned to them whilst Fowley was secretly answering to Spender. In 1992, the Syndicate assigned Fowley to other tasks in Europe and Mulder was left a lone embarrassing element at an FBI basement office. Senator Richard Matheson was his only supporter during that time.

Dana Katherine Scully, 1964-1992

Dana Scully was born on February 23, 1964, daughter of William and Margaret. Her father was a Navy Captain and her upbringing was Roman Catholic; she had two brothers, William Jr and Charles, and a sister, Melissa. She did her undergraduate in physics and continued studying forensic medicine. Against her father's wishes and not totally certain of her career choices, she entered the FBI in 1990. Scully developed a high sense of independence and strength as a woman evolving in a mostly male environment. She believed adamantly in science and its rigorous procedures to deduct conclusions. With science the only prism through which the world could be explained, she was a "skeptic" and wary of all things paranormal. This would clash with her underlying faith in God and would at times fill her with doubt throughout her life.

In 1992, under the orders of C.G.B. Spender, she was assigned to work with Mulder in the X-Files by Section Chief Scott Blevins. Her scientific and medical expertise was needed to assist (and perhaps discredit) Mulder's un-scientific approach.

The X-Files, 1992-1994

Despite conflicting world-visions, the Mulder-Scully partnership built on mutual respect on each other's competences. Even though the cases were not always solved neatly and question marks remained, the success rate was high enough. Mulder was approached by a man only known as "Deep Throat", a man who once worked for the Syndicate, a government executive attempting to provide Mulder with information so that the truth would somehow be exposed. Scully's father died that year. The unsettling questions the X-Files raised around government and military cover-ups surrounding alien presence on Earth eventually resulted in the X-Files being shut down in 1994; in the same case Deep Throat was shot dead for his role as an informant.

Mulder and Scully were assigned to other FBI tasks but continued communicating and investigating paranormal cases. The Syndicate decided that more extreme measures would have to be taken to silence them. Mulder was partnered with Alex Krycek, who was working undercover for the Syndicate. In a case involving Duane Barry, allegedly an alien abductee, Scully was abducted. She underwent many tests and experiments; her genome was soiled by alien DNA in hybridization experiments; her ova was taken, leaving her barren; she was implanted with both man-made and alien chips. She was returned four months later. FBI Assistant Director Walter Skinner, in an uneasy position balanced between his sense of duty and his orders from C.G.B. Spender, reopened the X-Files. Skinner would become an uncomfortable ally torn between blackmailing and what felt morally right.

Mulder and Scully's mutual trust grew as they discovered a governmental conspiracy involved with alien beings, spreading in ever more unexpected directions. Scully's disbelief in all things alien did not prevent her from having her initial faith in the government shaken. The two agents' quest for the truth became deeply personal when Bill Mulder was murdered by Krycek as he was about to reveal the truth of his involvement in the conspiracy to his son, and Scully's sister Melissa was murdered in her stead; Mulder came close to dying but was healed with the help of Navajo Albert Hosteen. The existence of the Syndicate became evident, even though its goals were still unknown or ill-defined. C.G.B. Spender, nicknamed "Cigarette-Smoking Man" (CSM), became the agents' nemesis. They often crossed paths with Krycek, on whom they and Skinner had reasons to seek revenge. The no-nonsense Syndicate henchman nicknamed "X" replaced Deep Throat, and after his death UN executive Marita Covarubias became Mulder's occasional informant.

Mulder came across various clones of his sister with the constant hope that he would find the original one; these hopes were often fuelled by others in an attempt to manipulate him towards their own goals. Mulder became victim of tests involving the Black Oil in Russia. Scully progressively learnt the truth behind her abduction experience and after she took off her implant she developed a terminal cancer. The CSM allowed Mulder to get the cure for Scully in an attempt to pull him on his side in the Syndicate, his plan for the last 6 years. Mulder refused and the CSM was shot for not complying with the Syndicate's majority agenda.

Scully and Mulder's beliefs were deeply shaken and oftentimes they were at a loss. A case of an alien body hoax involving the manipulation of the X-Files, as revealed by Department of Defense employee Michael Kritschgau, led Mulder to lose all his beliefs on the alien presence for a time.

Scully discovered her ova had been used to create children in a hybridization experiment; she attempted to adopt one of those children, Emily, but Emily died as a result of Scully's tampering. New elements that would destabilize the Syndicate appeared in 1998 with the faceless Rebels burning abductees. The agents met Jeffrey Spender, who had also become an FBI agent. With a case that might have finally turned conclusive evidence of the existence of aliens, mind-reader boy Gibson Praise, Mulder and Scully attracted the attention of the Justice Department; the case turned bad, the X-Files were shut down and the X-Files office was burnt to the ground by the CSM, freshly returned from exile.

Mulder and Scully's coincidental involvement with a Syndicate cover-up in Texas brought them to the full realization of the Syndicate's plans for colonization. Mulder saved Scully from a Black Oil infection, which cost the Syndicate member "Well-Manicured Man" his life. These circumstances led to the re-opening of the X-Files. However, the CSM turned his attention to Jeffrey this time, going through the same procedure as with Mulder: scheming to put him on the X-Files and bringing back Fowley from Europe to assign her with him and train him to learn the truth and join the CSM's side. Jeffrey did not prove as 'worthy' as Mulder as a believer and seeker of the truth in the eyes of the CSM. When the Syndicate elders were burnt by the Rebels in 1999, the CSM's life's work was destroyed; in the aftermath he shot his own son Jeffrey.

Mulder and Scully were reassigned to the X-Files. After all these years of deep appreciation and mutual understanding, the two agents grew ever more closer. Mulder's remnant Black Oil turned him into an alien/hybrid when an alien Ship surfaced in Africa; the CSM used this as an opportunity to transfer these hybrid properties from Mulder to him; after the operation, Diana Fowley was murdered, Mulder recovered but the CSM became terminally ill. All these years in the X-Files and Scully's examination of the Ship made her put her non-believer stance into question. As she progressively got more open, Mulder's quest for his sister came to a closure with his discovery of her true fate with the Walk-ins and with his mother's death he became an orphan. Mulder and Scully ended up resolving the underlying tension between them and consummated their relationship. A last attempt of the CSM to resurrect the Syndicate in 2000 ended up having him murdered by Krycek and having Mulder abducted by the Colonists, who were still actively pursuing preparations for colonization. Scully was left alone, and pregnant.

Agent John Jay Doggett was assigned to the X-Files with the expressed aim to find the missing Mulder. His respect and chivalric protection of Scully eventually won him her trust. Mulder, along with a series of abductees that were undergoing conversion into Supersoldiers, was returned months later and, considered dead, was buried. Three months later he was discovered alive; a series of coincidences ended up saving Mulder from alien replication. In the meanwhile, Scully had developed real doubts as to the possible alien nature of her baby. The delivery, assisted by Monica Reyes, FBI agent and a friend of Doggett, was very stressful and witnessed by many Supersoldiers. Skinner finally got revenge on Krycek by killing him.

Mulder and Scully were allowed a short reunion with their newborn son William before Mulder was forced into hiding by the Supersoldier conspiracy that sought to kill him. Scully became a medical instructor and only did consulting with the X-Files, which were now manned by Doggett and Reyes.

Scully learnt that William's emerging supernatural abilities were due to a project to progressively turn human babies into Supersoldiers. She also learnt that her ability to procreate had been given to her by the alien Ship in Africa, and that her son was a prophesized leader for the alien Colonists -- unless Mulder survived and guided him to be a leader of resistance. Jeffrey Spender, who had survived all this time, gave William an injection which prevented him from becoming a Supersoldier; this, however, did not revoke the prophecy and Scully resolved to give William up for abduction in order to protect his identity and location.

Mulder resurfaced when tried for an alleged murder; he was condemned to death by a staged military jury and was helped to escape by his friends. Mulder and Scully had a last meeting with the CSM, who had survived in hiding; the Supersoldier conspiracy, fully in power in the Syndicate's stead, finally killed the CSM and continued chasing Mulder and Scully. Doggett and Reyes were faced with the closure of the X-Files; Skinner and FBI Deputy Director Alvin Kersh were faced with reprimand for their support of Mulder. The Mulder and Scully couple became fugitives.

Six years later, 2008

Scully, now a doctor in a Catholic hospital, and Mulder, still on the lookout for anything paranormal, are a couple very much in love however tortured by inner and outside demons and have settled in a house in rural Virginia.
